Principles to which authors should adhere:

- Present original material that transparently shows the research process and fully reveals the value their research brings to the literature. To ensure originality upon publication, authors should not concurrently submit the same article or research to more than one publication.
- Ensure that any work presented as original is in fact original, which requires adding citations for all or part of any work that originated with other authors, and also adding quotation marks to any text that originated with other authors. The inclusion in an article of plagiarized text is never acceptable.
- Provide in each article sufficient detail, including the raw data used to support the conclusions made in the article, to enable professionals in relevant field to attempt to replicate the article's findings and conclusions. Results of tests and other research should be presented in the article directly and honestly, free from falsity, fabrication, or other inappropriate manipulation. The inclusion in an article of fraudulent data or knowingly inaccurate statements is never acceptable.
- Provide retractions or corrections to an article promptly upon discovery or notification (and verification) of inaccuracies in the article.
- Include with each article submitted for publication a complete and accurate list of reliable sources for all facts in the article.
- Disclose in each article all actual or perceived conflicts of interest, including as posed by any funding sources for the article.
- Ensure accurate attribution of authorship for each article, with all listed authors having made a significant contribution to the research and/or article, and all individuals who made a significant contribution to the research and/or article properly included as co-authors. Authors should take collective responsibility for all articles they submit and all articles they publish.

Principles to which peer reviewers should adhere:

- Decline to review articles that create a conflict of interest, or the appearance thereof, which can arise from the content of the article. In the event of uncertainty, peer reviewers should disclose the potential conflict of interest to the publisher and seek advice before proceeding further with a review.

- Reviews should be conducted objectively. Personal criticism of the author(s) is unacceptable.
- Reviewers should express their views clearly with appropriate supporting arguments and give a clear conclusion for acceptance or denial of the article. Promptly disclose to an article's editor that the article has not properly cited its sources, or contains errors or material omissions.
- Reviewers should not consider evaluating manuscripts in which they have conflicts of interest resulting from competitive, collaborative, or other relationships or connections with any of the authors, companies, or institutions connected to the submission.
- Refrain from using research or information contained in unpublished articles for any purpose, including for personal gain or for the advantage or disadvantage of any other person or organization.

Principles to which editors should adhere:

- Decide whether to accept or reject articles based solely on their scholarly or journalistic merit, which includes their importance, originality, clarity, and relevance to the journal's mission and purview.
- Maintain objectivity and balance in the review of all articles, acting without bias or favoritism based on the origin of an article, an author's gender, race, national origin, ethnicity, religious or political beliefs, sexual orientation, or age, or on the grounds of commercial considerations.
- Guide authors and peer reviewers on their responsibilities, and oversee their performance of those responsibilities, ensuring that the authors and peer reviewers understand what is expected of them.
- Adopt editorial policies that promote comprehensive, honest and ethical reporting.
- Preserve the anonymity of peer reviewers and the confidentiality of unpublished articles.
- Upon identifying errors or material omissions in an article, promptly communicate corrections, retractions and/or revisions, as applicable, to the publisher, and in the case of an unpublished article also to the author.

Principles to which the publisher should adhere:

- Uphold rigorous standards of publication ethics to maintain the integrity of the journal.
- Cease publication of any content that is not in accordance with these Standards for Publication Ethics.

- Promptly publish corrections, clarifications, revisions, retractions, and apologies, if and when the need arises, and with due prominence.
- Maintain the independence of editorial decisions, which should not be altered or influenced by commercial considerations or business needs.
